MIT Technology Review Pitching Guidelines

MIT Technology Review welcomes pitches from freelance writers across a broad range of topics. Editors want stories about technology itself, but they are particularly excited about those areas where technology and humans collide—where technology meets the real world. Stories should feel like must-reads for people who want to stay up to date with how technology is changing our world.

In general, the publication commissions news stories (roughly 800-1,000 words), analysis pieces (800-1,000 words), and features (2,500-4,000 words) from freelancer journalists for the website. In addition to news and features, the print magazine offers other potential formats for stories, including infographics and data spreads, reported essays, short profiles, and book essays. Our rates range from $1-2/word. For more information, please see its pitch guide (https://www.technologyreview.com/how-to-pitch-mit-technology-review/).
